Sorrow is natural, normal, and ecumenical. Everyone grieves: against the great unwashed weâ€™ve missed, life-time changes, bionomic crises, sure-enough traumas, ancestral woebegone, residential area challenges, experiences of severance, dashing hopes, and existential concerns. We may find oneself ourselves sorrowing as a answer of death, sickness or combat injury, disjunction, disaffection or grief, poverty, racial discrimination, or political convulsion. The causations of grief area unbounded, the likes of nature, and barely as unimaginable to augur or ascendancy.
